CLINTON NARROWLY LEADS TRUMP IN FLORIDA -- GOP THIRD PARTY DEFECTIONS & HISPANIC VOTERS CREATING THE CURRENT GAP

Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton currently holds a slight lead over Republican Donald Trump among Florida voters. Statewide, 45% support Clinton, 42% back Trump, 6% say they will vote for Libertarian candidate Gary Johnson and 7% are undecided.

Clinton is gaining her edge in two key areas – some defections from Trump to Johnson among white Republican and independent voters and extremely strong support for her among Hispanics (68%).

BIDEN STRONGER & SANDERS WEAKER AGAINST TRUMP

With the possibility of an indictment by the FBI regarding the use of her private e-mail server for State Department business still hanging in the air, another Democrat could become the party's nominee before November. In that event, it is clear that Vice President Joe Biden would be the strongest candidate to replace her and that current opponent Bernie Sanders would create problems.

In a hypothetical match-up, Biden holds a strong lead over Trump (50%-40%), while Sanders can only muster a 42%-42% tie. Biden's high favorable rating and relatively low negatives compared to the other candidates is a big factor. Both Trump (53%) and Clinton (47%) are seen unfavorably by about half of Florida voters.

AS A VP CHOICE, NELSON COULD HELP CLINTON WHILE SCOTT COULD SINK TRUMP

As the largest swing state, there is always speculation that one of the party nominees might choose a Floridian as a vice presidential running-mate. This year is no different with some chatter that Clinton might consider Florida Senator Bill Nelson and even more talk surrounding the possibility that Trump could select Florida Governor Rick Scott.

Nelson doesn't appear to pay big dividends for Clinton. He does have a small net positive effect amongst independent and undecided voters, but it appears to be marginal. Still, he certainly would do no damage and could make the difference in a one or two-point race.

On the other hand, Scott could be toxic for Trump in the state. A whopping 40% of Florida voters say they would be "less likely" to vote for Trump with Scott on the ticket. It should be noted that this figure is heavily driven by voters already supporting Clinton (67%), but the negative numbers also spill over into those still undecided. A significant 43% of those who are yet to make up their minds say they would be "less likely" to vote for a Trump-Scott ticket.

HOW THE POLL WAS CONDUCTED

This poll was conducted by Mason-Dixon Polling & Research, Inc. of Jacksonville, Florida from May 31 through June 2, 2016. A total of 625 registered Florida voters were interviewed statewide by telephone. All indicated they were likely to vote in the November general election.

Those interviewed on land-lines were selected by the random variation of the last four digits of telephone numbers. A cross-section of exchanges was utilized in order to ensure an accurate reflection of the state. Those interviewed on cell phones were selected from a list of working cell phone numbers. Quotas were assigned to reflect voter turnout by county.

The margin for error, according to standards customarily used by statisticians, is no more than ± 4 percentage points. This means that there is a 95 percent probability that the "true" figure would fall within that range if all voters were surveyed. The margin for error is higher for any subgroup, such as a gender or age grouping.
